

HANLEY, THE MAN WHO DOES THINGS

Since coming to Salt Lake City J. D. Hanley has won the sobriquet of "The Man Who Does Things." He is at the head of the J. D. Hanley Construction company, general contractors. This company was organized by Mr. Hanley, who was formerly of the contracting firm of Hanley & Richie. Four years ago Mr. Hanley came to Salt Lake City from Kansas, and since then he has been a large employer of labor in Utah and the adjoining states.

Among other work done by Mr. Hanley since making this community his headquarters is the construction of the Jordan & Salt Lake canal, the macadamizing of Sixth East street from Brigham to Third South, and the successful carrying out of various contracts in different parts of Utah, Idaho and Colorado. The macadamizing of Sixth East street has attracted wide attention because of the beauty of the street and because this was the real initiation of this form of street paving.

HIRAM TYREE.

The men of Salt Lake who have made fortunes from the mines and business of the intermountain country are almost numberless. Yet here and there a name stands out from the list with a prominence that bespeaks a record of operations for the owner larger and better known than is the case with the average run of mining operators and investment men. Throughout the west there are few men better known than Hiram Tyree of Greater Salt Lake, and one of the biggest mining operators in the western country. Mr. Tyree has been interested at one time or another in some of the most important and the largest industrial institutions this city boasts, aside from his activity in the mining field. He has come to the front solely by his own efforts, and the record he has established for energy, sound judgment and safe, conservative action. There has been no more progressive thinker and operator in both mining and industrial pursuits in Salt Lake the past few years than Mr. Tyree, and for his industry and foresight he has reaped one of the big fortunes of the city.

Prominent publicly and socially, he owns one of the finest mansions on Brigham street, an immense house noted for its wealth, finish and furnishings, and recognized as one of the most elegant homes in Zion.

The companies and corporations Mr. Tyree has become identified with the past few years are numerous, and they stand among the largest of their kind in Salt Lake. Especially prominent among them at present is the Reliance Mining & Milling company, with property located in the Bullion mining district, Lander county, Nevada. The mine is located at a point twenty-five miles from Bowawe, a small station on the main line of the Southern Pacific railroad, 275 miles west of Ogden.

Mr. Tyree is president of this company, and from present indications from the property the presidency of the company will rank with the similar offices of the biggest companies in Nevada. The company was organized under the laws of Utah with $1,250,000 shares at $1 each. With Mr. Tyree as president of the corporation, is associated H. C. Edwards as vice president; W. S. McCormick, treasurer, and C. C. Wylie, secretary.

Mr. Tyree has always been associated in his operations in the western mining field with some of the biggest and most influential men of the big camps, and he has gained a wealth of experience that has carried his judgment into important councils among the men who shape the destinies of the intermountain and western mining world.

Mr. Tyree is, first, last and all the time, a Salt Lake booster. He thoroughly believes in the future of this city as the commercial center of the intermountain country, and has invested his money here to prove his faith. His property holdings about the city are important and extensive. A member of all the large clubs, Mr. Tyree is a hale, well-met man, whose friends are legion here and elsewhere.
